By Indira Gandhi; Foreword By Sonia Gandhi

Penguin/Viking, New Delhi, India, 2007. Hard Cover. Book Condition: New. Dust Jacket Condition: New. First Edition. Indira Gandhi, whose life was so closely intertwined with the history and destiny of modern India, will always occupy a very special place in our hearts. As prime minister for sixteen and a half years, she was a visionary leader who strove relentlessly to build a strong, united and secular India. But we remember her equally for her human qualitiesher courage and grace, and her compassion for the weak and the disinherited. For millions of people, she remains the very embodiment of Indias indomitable spirit. This slim volume, brought out on the occasion of Indira Gandhis ninetieth birth anniversary, is an excellent introduction to her legacy. The sayings in this book, most of which are taken from her speeches, give a glimpse of the many aspects of her personalityhow deeply affected she was by the tragic accounts of victims of sectarian violence or natural disasters, the pleasure she derived from the spontaneous remark of a child, the gift of a memento, of little material value, but which she treasured because it was given with love, or the delight of tasting a new dish that...
