Excerpt: . mr. pole-gells proposed amalgamation. ( The Live Stock Journal; April 6th, 1884. S1r, --You invite discussion on this most important and almost vital subject to shire horse-breeders. As silence is often taken to mean consent, Mr. Pole-Gell and his Clydesdale friends will probably think he had only one opponent in Mr. F. Street. At the general meeting of the English CaTt-horse Society, at the London show, the feeling of the meeting was not taken; had it been, I feel sure Mr. Street would have had a large majority to support him. The more the subject is ventilated, the more suicidal it will be seen would be the policy of the breeders of the shire horse to entertain for a moment such an idea as amalgamation. What have they to gain by it? It is quite plain what the Clydesdale men would get by it. Mr. Pole-Gell plainly says, that until he began to purchase Clydesdales with pedigrees, he had no idea of the extent to which English stallions and mares had been imported into Scotland, that this drain still continues, and that he is confident, without these importations, even the present size and substance of Scotch horses cannot be maintained, much less increased; and he evidently wishes it should continue, at the expense of the English breeder. I suppose he wants these cross-bred animals called Clydesdales, although he takes exception to the word cross-bred; for, if cross-bred, he says he is at a...
